Dry Eye & Sjogren's Syndrome (SA001, Rebamipide Mofetil)

We designed a new prodrug of rebamipide, called rebamipide mofetil, to overcome the low bioavailability of rebamipide and facilitate systemic absorption via oral administration. SA001 is currently being developed as a world's first oral drug for dry eye syndrome and Sjogren's syndrome. Notably, Sjogren's syndrome is an autoimmune disease that accompanies symptoms of dry eyes and dry mouth, and no drugs have been approved for the fundamental treatment of Sjogren's syndrome to date.

Age-related Macular Degeneration (SJP1803/1804, NOX Inhibitor)

For the patients who are resistant to anti-VEGF therapeutics, a standard therapy for wet age-related macular degeneration (AMD), novel drugs including PDGF antibodies have been under development, but no drugs have been successful in the clinical trials. SJP1803/1804 exerts therapeutic efficacy via a novel mechanism of action which fundamentally inhibits the production of VEGF and VEGF-R in the retina and other lesional tissues. Because SJP1803/1804 acts orthogonal to the current anti-VEGF therapeutics, we expect synergistic therapeutic efficacy when SJP1803/1804 is administered in combination with the current therapies, and SJP1803/1804 can be also a viable treatment option for the patients who have low response rates to the current therapies.

Notably, while the current therapeutics have very poor patient compliance and show severe side effects due to frequent intravitreal injections, SJP1804 is being developed as an eye drop formulation of a novel small molecule which shows greater therapeutic efficacy than the current therapy (Eylea injection), and SJP1803 is being developed as an intravitreal implant that can be administered once every 6 month or a year. Our SJP1803/1804 programs, which have a novel mechanism of action, a non-invasive route of administration, and high patient compliance, will become an innovative therapeutic option that overcomes the limitations of current therapeutics for wet-AMD.
